

Patricia serves as VP Business Development for National Security Corporation, which has provided security expertise to government, military, and commercial clients for over 35 years. Focused on emerging technologies, she has served on leadership teams at Silicon Graphics, Accenture and PwC and has helped lead efforts in inclusive intelligent infrastructure, water tech, quantum computing, breach and attack simulation, security engineering, robotics and education. She serves on the SAE Austin Board, and is a Member of the Advisory Board for the Autonomy Institute. Patricia is a graduate of Harvard University, earning her MBA. She graduated summa cum laude from Loyola University in Chicago, with a Bachelor in Business Administration, and obtained her CPA.